

Columbia River Treaty Review 2014/2024

US Army Corps
of Engineers

Many dams and reservoirs in the Columbia River Basin operate together under the Columbia River Treaty to manage flood risks and generate hydropower to benefit the Pacific Northwest. These river operations also support fish and wildlife, recreation, water supply and navigation.

Please join the U.S. Entity Public Roundtable Discussions Draft Regional Recommendation on the future of the Treaty

- ❖ Understand this draft's evolution and changes since the earlier working draft
- ❖ Discuss what change could mean to the region
- ❖ Learn about the next steps in the Treaty Review process

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and the Bonneville Power Administration, who form the U.S. Entity, will discuss these topics and answer questions during this informal roundtable meeting. These discussions will support your understanding of the Draft Regional Recommendation that now is available for public comment through October 25.

All participants are encouraged to share their opinions on the future of the Columbia River Treaty and learn more about the Draft Regional Recommendation. These sessions will feature open discussions, with no scheduled presentations.
